

General Usage Guidelines

These guidelines are included to help users maximize the benefits from using BladeGen.

1. Users should first define the meridional profile before defining the Ang/Thk or Prs/Sct views, since these views are dependent on the path length of the meridional profile's layers.
2. The Angle, Thickness, and Pressure/Suction Views define parameters on a layer (a streamline in the meridional view). The first layer must be the hub and the second must be the shroud, with additional layers inserted at a user-specified fraction of the span. If only one layer is defined, it applies to the entire span between hub and shroud. The Pressure/Suction view requires that both the hub and shroud layers be defined.
3. All views display the same layer and blade. If a view doesn't have a definition for a particular layer that is being displayed, the calculated values at that layer are displayed.
4. The mode (Ang/Thk or Prs/Sct) is determined, initially, by the type of component created or the mode of the model when it was saved. However, the mode can be changed using the Model | Mode | Ang/Thk Mode... or Model | Mode | Prs/Sct Mode... menu commands.
